Dinara Rasuleva (she/her) is a tatarian poet and performance artist. Born in Russia, Kazan. Obtained a Master Degree in Linguistics at the Nizhny Novgorod State Linguistic University. Since 2015 lives in Berlin.

In the past years Dinara organized and co-organized poetry festivals and events dedicated to the political repressions against women in Russia. She organized a big protest rave in 2020 in front of the Russian Embassy in Berlin, which brought together dozens of people from Germany and Russia.

In 2018 she started her own support group for Russian-speaking immigrant women* and non-binary people.

In 2020 she started her own course of feminist writing and poetry, where she invites the guests from Russian-speaking countries as speakers: feminist writers and poetesses, publishers and bloggers. She also includes a course on gender-sensitive writing held by her fellow feminist group Bogatyrki.

Based on the course materials she founded a digital feminist publishing house Napishi in Oct, 2020.

Since 2015 Dinara performed in Germany (Bonn, Cologne, Frankfurt, Berlin, Hamburg), Russia (Kazan and Moscow), Kazakhstan, Netherlands, Japan, Lithuania, Estonia, Latvia and more.

Dinara uses experimental poetry, spoken word and performative art to express her feminist vision through the experience of losing you native language and your motherland, you family and your roots. In her art she analyses the coping with your own biases that came from religious and cultural traditions of your family being a modern feminist in a European society. She also raises the problems of gender violence normalized in her culture, state violence and stigmatized mental disabilities as depression.
